Sometimes they are low and small as a note, and people won't remember anything about them anyway. And there are flowers that you can find in the middle of a raincoat, that are a sign to everybody, that somebody loves you, when nobody is there to see. But there are also flowers that you can find in the heart of the afternoon sun, when the air is warm, and when the wind is almost leaving the last of its leaves. These are flowers that you might love, without even realizing that you do. For they open, like your eyes, when you look for the first time, in the middle of the street, where flowers do not usually open.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a hydrogen storage alloy powder for a negative electrode which comprises a hydrogen storage alloy suitable for a negative electrode for a non-aqueous electrolyte secondary battery and is preferably used for a negative electrode for a high-capacity nickel-hydrogen battery, and a method for producing the powder, a porous electrode made of the hydrogen storage alloy powder and a non-aqueous electrolyte secondary battery having a negative electrode comprising the porous electrode.

2. Description of the Related Art A non-aqueous electrolyte secondary battery is charged by an electrochemical reaction. In this case, an oxidation reaction of lithium occurs on the positive electrode, and a reduction reaction of lithium occurs on the negative electrode. A lithium ion secondary battery has, generally, a structure in which the

I have a field in my table that is a binary string (uniqueidentifier). I want to store this binary string into the field, but I don't want it to be replaced by something else if I change the value. So, should I just store the value in a varchar field? A: You can use BIN() for binary string (uniqueidentifier) fields. But this would lead to convert binary string to binary string. In your case you should store it as binary string and simply convert it back to byte array (which is uniqueidentifier type) when you need to.
