Numerous regimens have been used to accelerate the passage of the upper gastrointestinal (GI) endoscope. This systematic review and meta-analysis attempts to make recommendations for the optimal regimens after assessing the available data. We searched PubMed, Web of Science, Scopus, Google Scholar, Cinahl Plus, EMBASE, Cochrane Library, China Knowledge Resource Integrated Database and Chinese BioMedical Literature Database from January 2010 to December 2014. Studies having compared the passage of the endoscope using different regimens were identified. The data on the GI passage time was extracted directly or calculated from published data. A random-effect model was used to pool all data, RevMan 5.0 was applied to present data. Seven randomized clinical trials and 26 nonrandomized clinical studies that enrolled 1484 patients met the inclusion criteria. In two fixed-effect models comparing the regimens, oral sucrose (251.5 mL) significantly reduced the OR to expect GI passage compared with placebo (476.8 mL) [OR 0.42, 95% confidence interval (CI) 0.32-0.55] or bisacodyl (111.9 mL) [OR 0.50, 95% CI 0.38-0.69] on the day of the procedure. In two fixed-effect models, the OR for the regimens in 3-5 days was 0.35 (95% CI 0.28-0.45) compared to placebo, while the OR for 4-6 days regimen was 1.16 (95% CI 0.93-1.44) compared to placebo.     Q: Suitable algorithms to use for verification of a circuit using language L There is a standard set of circuits called subsets of linear languages with Verification, UpperBounds and LowerBounds as defined in Rissanen and Suominen's book Language-based Methods in System Design Formal Methods. It seems to me that these are not purely logic circuits which can be partially specified and verified in a context like language A based on regular expressions? Is there a reference with an introduction to designing with subsets of linear languages? It is the acceptance condition of true in first order arithmetic which i am really interested in. A: They are. You can't find the exact references to the standard itself, however - that's something that's usually given under a well-known name, and that's been summarised in a lot of publications in the last 100 years. More information on that can be found either on Wikipedia or at the source. In addition, 'Language-based' has completely been taken out of use - at least in standards bodies, because the 'language' variant of the family of subsets is no longer commonly studied. Instead, you'd use a more recent formalism, such as $GL(n,Q)$ (which can be considered to be a generalisation of logic circuits), $SL(n,Q)$ (a variant suited for partial specifications), or PSPACE if you want more satisfying results. A: The subsets of linear languages with verification are closed under complementation. Thus, you can verify a circuit when the input is pulled from a language which is decidable (finite automata) and thus disjoint from L. (That is, verify even if L is infinite.) Q
