A flat display device, such as a liquid crystal display device, is widely used because the flat display device has a light weight, a small thickness, a small occupied volume and so on. The liquid crystal display device includes an array substrate in which pixels each including a pixel electrode are arranged in a matrix. The array substrate is formed by printing a conductive ink on a glass substrate including a display region. In order to ensure a uniform film thickness of the conductive ink, it is necessary to prevent an ink shift in which the conductive ink is shifted in a longitudinal direction of the array substrate. For example, JP 2013-045573 A describes a method of manufacturing an array substrate in which a shift of the conductive ink in the longitudinal direction of the array substrate is prevented. According to the method described in JP 2013-045573 A, a glass substrate having a predetermined size is divided into a plurality of pieces. When the conductive ink is printed in each divided piece, a certain amount of shift of the conductive ink is permitted in each piece. Accordingly, the conductive ink is not shifted in the longitudinal direction of the array substrate d0c515b9f4
