Bản dành cho dáng thứ hình trụ I want to port TSPLINES over to a new workspace. How can I accomplish this? A: The command-line tool uses one of these as parameters: -l, --linewidth=LINEWIDTH, -w LINEWIDTH The assumed line width in points for the line rendering -h, --headoffset=HEADOFFSET, -x HEADOFFSET The assumed line head offset in units of points, i.e. 0 points is a right-aligned line, 1 point is a centered line -c, --scale=SCALE, -s SCALE The overall scaling of the image, determined by SCALE/1000 -c, --scale=SCALE, -s SCALE The assumed pixel scaling relative to the window size, determined by SCALE/1000 However you were using a tool that was a GUI based, meaning in order to port, you'd have to edit the script and replace the package with the actual path of the tool. For a script example you can check out: You can find the path in the readme inside the archive. Looking on the rest of the scripts, I've found this: # Data files # data_files = 'newimage.img', 'background.jpg' # Type of output (0 = bitmap, 1 = GIMP GIF) # type = '0' # Window size # window_width = 400 window_height = 400 # # Window size relative to the input size. # # screen_w should be as close to the actual window size as possible, # but not larger than (window_width+20) # # screen_h should be as close to the actual window size as possible, # but not larger than (window_height+20) # screen_w = window_width screen_h = window_height # Center of the window
