It.Q: What is the correct way to use node.js' promise pattern in a stateless web application? I'm new to the node.js and express.js patterns. I want to write a stateless web application, which uses express.js to build itself an API server. I'm puzzled about how to do this using the "promise pattern" that node.js offers. The API server could potentially be a long-running operation. If I use it like this: var express = require('express'); var app = express(); app.use(express.json()); app.post('/test', function(req, res){ var query = {id : req.body.id}; var queryResult = db.search(query); queryResult.then(function(result){
